

679135

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to novel endosseous implants, which are designed so that the areas intended for bone apposition exhibit a scalloped appearance, including both 5 convex and concave patterns, to follow the naturally occurring bone morphology. Thus, the disclosed implants provide attachment possibilities for both bone and soft tissue, thereby effecting both hard- and soft-tissue preservation.

10

15

20

25

30

35